His way of painting called the 'splashed ink' technique, leads to unplanned ink splashes that strongly contrast with the plain white backdrop. It doesn't merely depict nature; instead, it catches the soul and feeling of the subject, be it a fish in a pond or a bird in the sky. Baishi's combined approach of unique brushwork and advanced use of shading gave his works a sense of space and texture. His technique had a raw and wild feeling, different from the rigid and formal style of some older Chinese art. This one-of-a-kind style made Qi Baishi a trendsetter in Chinese art.
